Three audiences heard consolidation discussions last night. At two of them, speakers presented both pros and cons of the issue, while at the others, the pro-merger side was given.

Approximately 100 persons gathered at Marshall County Community Center to hear Hunter B. Andrews, Hampton attorney and secretary of the Citizens Committee for Overall Consolidation.

Andrews, speaking first on the program, said the three cities now are one economically and geographically, and "no one can deny it."

He called consolidation "a give and take" affair, and said it would relieve the "oppressing burden of taxation" which has been placed upon the property owners.

He said consolidation "will give the three cities a new lease on life" and that it would relieve the "oppressing burden of taxation" which has been placed upon the property owners.
