W&M provost to stay at job

By JEFF MILLER
Staff Writer

WILLIAMSBURG — George R. Healy, provost of the College of William and Mary, has changed his plans and will not retire next year.

Healy will remain at his post after a new college president has been hired to aid the transition of administrations.

Anne Doble Peebles, rector of the college's board of visitors, said Healy will stay on for "an unspecified" length of time after a successor to retiring President Thomas A. Graves is hired. A search for a new provest to succeed Healy will be developed by the board and the administration "at a later date," she said.

Healy submitted his resignation in December, when Graves did. He intended to retire when Graves left the college in the summer of 1983.

Miss Peebles said Healy is staying on at the board's request to allow the new president to select his own executive officer.

Healy, taking vacation in Greece, could not be reached for comment.

Healy and Graves came to W&M in 1971. The searches to fill the two positions were conducted by the board simultaneously, partly because Healy's predecessor, W. Melville Jones, was nearing mandatory retirement age and a replacement was needed quickly.

Three weeks after becoming president, Graves helped select Healy from a list of candidates provided by the search committee.

A new president for the college is expected to take office at the end of the 1984-85 academic year. Advertisements that appeared last week specify July 31 as the deadline for applications.

Board down to wire on budget

By RAY BETZNER
Staff Writer

YORK — The County Board of Supervisors will start deciding tonight who will get how much in the fiscal 1985 budget.

A parade of groups made their pitches to supervisors Tuesday for county contributions. Chairman Rodgers Smith said the board will make some decisions when it meets at 7 tonight in the county Administration Building.

Smith hopes the $41.1 million fiscal 1985 budget will be ready for final action by June 7, but said the supervisors might not have it in final form until the June 21 meeting. The fiscal year begins July 1.

While making a plea for the Williamsburg Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, President Ellen Rudolph said the county is not doing its share. The SPCA accepts animals from Williamsburg and James City and York counties.

James City agreed to contribute $10,000 and Williamsburg agreed to $7,500 for the SPCA budget. York's proposed budget has only $1,500 set aside for the organization.

About 415 animals from York end up at the SPCA each year. Based on this, the county should be paying $7,400 next year to the group, she said.

The SPCA president also said she can't get county information on the number of animals taken in at the county dog pound. Several requests for the information have yielded no response.

"I wonder who knows what is going on in the animal control department," she said. She handed County Administrator John Richardson a written request for the information before leaving the work session.

Also asking for money in fiscal 1985 is the county Industrial Development Authority. The county normally finances the authority, but the group wants $91,000 for fiscal 1985, a $27,800 increase over fiscal 1984.

Authority Chairman Richard F. Wilkinson said part of the increase will help pay for a study on developing an industrial park at Patrick Henry International Airport. The study is being done by the airport commission.

About 500 acres of airport property is in the county, Wilkinson said an industrial park is the last big item the county needs to be certified by the state. Once it grants certification, the state would then "come to use with businesses," Wilkinson said.

Other requests for money included $10,000 from the Yorktown Arts Foundation and $17,000 from the Williamsburg Area Chamber of Commerce.

The county Leisure Services Board also asked supervisors to consider buying land for recreational purposes.

Water curtain being installed

Occupational Safety and Health Administration say the coal dust problem would have to get much worse before it would become a health hazard.

Coal dust became a problem for the Harbor Homes residents more than a year ago when Massey Coal Terminal started operations next to the city marine terminal, the tenants said.

After the tenants complained repeatedly to the Air Pollution Control Board and City Council, Massey Terminal installed a water sprinkler system that reduced dust emissions.

The sprinklers did not entirely solve Massey's dust problem.

The terminal is installing a "water curtain" to block dust from blowing off the terminal property and onto the apartments.

While Massey was trying to solve its dust problem, Dominion Coal Terminal was put into operation.

Dominion lacks an adequate sprinkler system, according to the Air Pollution Control Board, and it is an additional source of coal dust.

Dominion was cited by the Air Pollution Control Board this week and was warned to have its sprinkler system operational by the end of the month.

Harbor Homes residents complained Wednesday that they were never consulted when city and state permits were issued to build the coal terminals.

Had they been aware that coal terminals were being built, they would have protested, Mrs. Tabb said.

When construction began on the terminals, some residents thought it was part of the interstate going up, she said.

"No one came down here to explain" that coal terminals were being built and that they could create dust problems, she said.
